Chairmen's Statement

Dear Shareholders,

Work. Life. Today more than ever before, work and life have become inseparable. And Adecco is at the junction of both. With these two simple words, we summarize our intention to continue bringing value to individuals and society at large, fulfilling our responsibilities as the number one provider of employment opportunities worldwide.

Adecco pioneered the staffing industry almost half a century ago. As companies and individuals embraced flexibility, Adecco expanded its service offering and became one of the largest private employers in the world. Today, we play a major role in global labour markets, providing work to millions of people and servicing hundreds of thousands of small, medium and large companies daily.

As the leader of an industry centred on individuals, Adecco has a significant social responsibility. Adecco fulfils this role by supporting individuals and companies across the world in their transition towards a better future. We believe that this social responsibility is in line with our goal of providing superior returns to our shareholders and is key to sustainable and profitable growth.

Emerging demographic, geographic and technological forces are gradually shaping the world of work. As the population in developed countries grows older and young talent becomes scarce, companies adapt by offering more attractive careers to those entering the labour market, while they develop new ways of attracting and retaining senior workers in productive positions. New geographies are emerging to leading positions in the global economy. Asian regions continue their rapid development and are poised to overtake their Western counterparts as the world's economic engine. New industries such as off-shore services are disrupting the rules of the game, challenging established business practices. Technology, with its constant evolution, is enabling new forms of interaction through seamless collaboration across time zones, minimizing the need for paper-based transactions.

In this context, the relationship of individuals, companies and governments to work is evolving rapidly. People seek to maintain their income levels. Companies look for flexibility in the face of increasing productivity pressures. Governments evolve in their traditional role of welfare providers and overseers of the labour market. Both companies and governments turn to external partners for support. In this environment, Adecco holds constant its aspiration to become the most trusted partner for companies and governments, as well as a true reference for individuals who would otherwise be left alone in managing their changing careers. Our offering: the only truly global perspective on work.

A changing environment requires a vigorous and dynamic company. The successful handling of the 2003 financial reporting delay demonstrated Adecco's ability to develop and change. The Board of Directors commissioned an independent investigation, which did not find anything financially material to the Company. During 2004, Adecco successfully addressed the material weaknesses identified in the 2003 audit. Under the leadership of CEO Jérôme Caille, Adecco increased sales and profits and outperformed competitors in major markets, despite the pressures created by the investigation. Indeed, the year 2004 confirmed the extreme resilience of our Company and the strong relationships that we have established with our clients and people.

Last year's challenges accelerated necessary change that is now the base for a solid future. A new Board of Directors, appointed as of June 2004 and consisting of a majority of independent business leaders, provides strong leadership in business strategy and compliance matters. Our management team continues to drive forward performance, refreshed by the arrival of a new Chief Financial Officer and by the introduction of Chief Operating Officers for our three divisions: Adecco Staffing, Ajilon Professional and Lee Hecht Harrison Career Services.

We wish to express our deep gratitude to all board members and management. Furthermore, we offer our warmest thanks to our colleagues, clients and shareholders for their efforts, loyalty and support. They will above all remain the key to our future performance. All in all, we consider that Adecco is well positioned for 2005 and beyond. We are committed to making individuals, companies and societies successful, making a positive impact on their work and lives.
